When we speak of our little ones who have been called away from our earthly homes to the better land, why do we say "the children we have lost?" Invariably do we hear the little ones, whose vacant chair, stand around our firee da, spoken of as lest children. Rather should we say our resoled little ones-our saved darings. Have they not been called wi hin the pearly gate, where sin, pain, sorrow and death never come. Their tipy feet can never stray outside or the golden city. The children who are left to us may wanter into the paths of temptation and sorrow-they may occasion many hours of acxiety and many tears, but the little c illdren who have been gathered in among the redeemed ones, who left us to their purity and ionocence, will always be pure-no taint of sin will tarnish their infant souls.

When the darkness gathers around us at night, and we tremple for the boys who are outside of the home walls, liable to all the temptations that the cover of night throws about them, we need have no fear for the loved ones who have been rescald from a world of sin. There is no night in that oright lend where they dwell-always bright eternal noon." The angel feet of cur calldren above will never stray outside the gates of purity and haptiness. Our children who have gone to heaven never grow old. Leigh Hunt say, with truth, that shose who have lost an locant are never without a child. They are the only persons who, in one sense, retain it always.

Our children who are left to us on earth, grow up; they suffer all the changes of mortale ity. They leave the paternal root, scatter in different parts of the world, and the objidren different parts of the world, and the obliden never come back to us again. But the father and mother, when age has crept over them.

We have completed our inventory and thrown that for them the little ones who went to know that for them the little ones who went to heaven, so long sgo, are children stil; that the time is not far off when they shall most the little ones where partings never come. The words of Ainswerth are beau itul. He says: The little boy who died so long ago is an steroal child. His partice look, with heaven shining full upon his brow-the beauty that the bests grow warm beholding, remains uncouched by time, even as the unrent sky that lets the

"Of such is the kingdom of heaven," said our blessed Saviour. What a large propertion of the dwellers to heaven must be little children! How happy they are, living in the light of the smile of the blessed One. "I know Jusus smiled when he was onearth," said a dear little girl, "because when he said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," they would not have gone in such numbers if he had not smiled when he said it." The faith of a child is unquestioned, "Dou't cry when I'm gore, mamma," said a little one a few hours before she left her carthly home, "I am going up, up, shove all the worlds, to live with Je-us forever. He loves little children, and he will be, O, so kind to me. I never will have to be sick and suffer paid when I get where he is." Precious child!

When we talk of our little ones who are gone to the peaceful and we will not speak of them any more as the children we have lost, but as children who hav been lovingly gathered into the arena of our Fa her in heaven, and saved to us to be our chudren in the eternal world.
